Prospective. From the New York Bulletin, Jan. 10. The market for breadstuffs for the week has been characterized by steadiness and slowly increasing strength, but not by activity or by a marked and general advance, Park bonds 25 Morris or Kercheval ... 97 until the close, when shipping grades of flour and the whole grain list (with the exception of rye) advanced, and became much more active, with a still further upward tendency on the articles affected, and a strengthening one on those not yet influnced by the advance. The demand has been both export and speculative, and the increased activity has been due, perhaps, as much to one as the other.

Shippers have not shown any great aclivity, however, and have continued to resist the stronger views of holders as far as possible, and hence have done no business which they were not obliged to, and, therefore, they have not made speculative purchases or for future delivery, except for flour. From this fact and the other, that they have not been purchasing as much as has gone into consumption on the other ide, our dealers anticipate a stronger demand soon, and hence the strength on their part which has been manifested by their esistency in their demands for better We have no change to note in financial prices, which is tersely expressed by the natters.
